Leader of three major research projects in Sanskrit literature at BHU & Kalidasa Sansthan, Varanasi. A versatile academic with firsthand experience in administration of departmental and university affairs. An award-winning, multi-gold- medalist, first-class-first student of literary fundamentals under leading scholars of modern times, including his father Mahamahopadhyay Prof. Rewa Prasada Dwivedi 'Sanatana.'

Brief Description of the event

He said that the principle of Natyashastra of Bharat Muni is applicable to all the principles of knowledge. There is no such thing in the world which does not have Rasa. When a student of medical science also studies, he will not be interested in it until he wants to be interested in it. Vedas are the storehouse of knowledge. They show how knowledge is created. Whatever is the visible world, whatever is nature, whatever is transparent, everything is also within us. Bit means universal power. The knowledge of Rit and Sat is visible in the Vedas. We have four Ashrams here. We used to develop ourselves in celibacy. When the child of Brahmacharya comes to Grihastha, where he gets connected to the world, then in Vanaprastha he imbibes the knowledge of the world, and after that comes sanyasa. Here, Sanyasa does not mean the renunciation of the world, but the person lives in the whole world, connects with, and shares his knowledge with the world. His knowledge is reflected in the form of Vedas. Knowledge, action, and worship are the three aspects of the Vedas.
