Summary

The guest speaker, Ar. Prem Chandavarkar, Honorary Associate Professor, School of Architecture, University of Queensland gave an invigorating insight to many craft traditions in India face a crisis of survival. The conditions that sustained them in the past no longer exist, and they must struggle to find spaces where their livelihoods can endure. A solution often proposed is that the modern designer can be of help, aiding the craftsman in innovation and finding new markets.

He gave his insight to the questions like: Is this a viable strategy? Does craft need to be preserved or transformed? And in the exchange between the modern designer and the traditional craftsman, could it be that the modern designer has more to learn than the traditional craftsman?
